The Conclusion of M. de Mellaredes Memorial deliver'd to the Court of Vienna.

25. THE third Demand of his Royal Highness, is, that the Equivalent of Vigevinasco be forthwith regulated, conformably to the 2d Article of the secret Articles, and that he be put into Possession of that Equivalent. As it was his Imperial Majesty who yielded to his Royal Highness that Equivalent, and transferr'd to him the Propriety of the Demesnes and of the Jurisdiction thereto belonging, not so much in the Quality of Emperor as in that of Head of the most August House of Austria, at a time when he had acquir'd that Right by the Death of King Charles II of Spain Duke of Milan, so likewise 'tis from his Imperial Majesty alone that his Royal Highness will receive that Equivalent, and execute in this Point as well as in all the rest the Treaty between him and his Imperial Majesty with whom he had the Honour to make it; For the Executing of a Contract ought to be perform'd with the Person that contracted. Besides, 'tis needless to have the Consent of his Catholick Majesty King Charles III, after the Ratification he has given of the Treaty which has produc'd such essential Advantages in his Favour, and which has so much contributed to the acquisition of his Dominions principally in Italy. Moreover, 'tis to be consider'd, that the Equivalent of Vigevinasco, as well as the other Provinces and Territories made over to his Royal Highness, were Dismember'd from the State of Milan by the Treaty, from which Time they have no longer been accounted Members of the said State of Milan; and consequently there is no need of the Consent of his Catholick Majesty to regulate the Equivalent. We may even venture to say, that the same Motives which induc'd the deceas'd Emperor to declare in the 13th Article of the Treaty, that it was of great Importance that the House and Dominions of Savoy should be always united in Interest with the Emperour and Empire, ought to be very cogent with the Empeour to give solely his own Order for regulating the Equivalent and putting his Royal Highness into Possession of it, it being his Interest that his Royal Highness should hold all of him: and 'tis of his Imperial Majesty that he will hold all that is made over to him, and is resolv'd not to relinquish him.

26. His Royal Highness demands in the fourth Place, the Investitures of the Montferrat, and of the Provinces Territories and Rights transferr'd from the State of Milan, agreeably to the 16th Article of the Treaty: And that in the mean time the Minutes (or Draught) of them be settled, to the End they may be in a Readiness to be made out in Form as soon as the Ban against the Duke of Mantua shall be publish'd. His Royal Highness persuades himself his Imperial Majesty will give Order, that the Preamble of the said Investitures be conformable to that of the Treaty, and that a Recital may therein be made succinctly of the Effects of the Treaty, for the greater Honour of his Royal Highness, and for an eternal Monument of his Sacrifices, his Firmness, and his inviolable Adherence to the Interest of his Imperial Majesty and of his most August House.

27. His Royal Highness flatters himself likewise, that his Imperial Majesty will not suffer to be inserted in the Investitures, as has been done in the Minute communicated to his Envoy extraordinary, the Clause and Condition sive qua non express'd in the 19th Article of the Treaty; not only because 'tis needless to insert it in the Investitures, seeing those Investitures refer to the Treaty, and 'tis an Axiom in Law that relatum intelligitur cum omnibus suis qualitatibus esse in referente, but chiefly in Consideration of his Royal Highness's Firmness that was proof against all Adversities and Temptations, his unexampled Constancy, and his inviolable Adherence to the Interests of his Imperial Majesty; who most assuredly will not offer him so essential an Injury, as to Signify in a perpetual Title That he made a Doubt of them after so many Trials so many Proofs, and to transmit to Posterity that Doubt, which would tarnish his own Glory as well as that of his Royal Highness: For there is almighty Difference between the present Time and that wherein the Treaty was made; then 'twas only hop'd that the Union and Adherence of his Royal Highness to the Emperour's Interests would produce great Advantages, now those Advantages have been receiv'd, are enjoy'd, and more are continually coming in.

28. Besides, 'tis intended not to insert the other Articles of the Treaty; and the Reason alledg'd for it, is, that 'tis contrary to the Stile of the Chancery, and that 'tis sufficient to refer to the Treaty: Now for that very Reason, for others parallel, and also for those intimated above, the foresaid 19th Article ought not to be inserted in the Investitures.

29. Lastly, his Royal Highness demands, that his Imperial Majesty will be pleas'd to give Order that he may be satisfied for the very considerable Advances he has made for maintaining the Imperial Troops, Advances that amount to very near Eight Millions of Livres of Piemont, for which his Royal Highness has been oblig'd to engage some of the principal Rights of his Crown at excessive Interest. 'Tis true his Imperial Majesty return'd Answer to the Memorial of the Earl of Manchester, that his Royal Highness should be re-imburs'd, and that he had sent Order to Prince Eugene to find Expedients to pay him: But 'tis well known that the Revenues of the State of Milan not being sufficient to defray the Charge and Maintenance of the Imperial Army, 'tis impossible for Prince Eugene to find means to pay his Royal Highness: who hopes his Imperial Majesty will not let him stand engag'd for Debts that he contracted solely to maintain his Troops.

30. He flatters himself likewise, that all the Difficulties which have hitherto been made, will not avail to divert the just and upright Intentions of his Imperial Majesty towards him, nor to put off any longer the Execution of the Treaty, which he had the Goodness to assure the Ministers of his Royal Highness he would cause to be perform'd out of Hand, and that he would give Direction to his Ministers that all those Difficulties should be Suppress'd, that none should be rais'd for the future, and that his Royal Highness should be satisfied in all his Demands.
